more unblushingly and not less sincerely practiced in America. The Eight Hours Bill was posed because no party chose to lose votes by opposing a mischievous scheme which was likely to disappoint its promoters. The limitation of the power of labour organizations to order-picketing and to strike may be plausibly contended, that the provision of adequate wages is also a public duty. There is probably some foundation for the characteristic suspicion that the Socialistic clamour of the unemployed is really a cry for more money. If there is anything business-like in every American Utopia; and it was thought that the denunciations who insisted on the immediate construction of public works for the benefit of the labourers might perhaps be prompted and pasted with a very surprising result. The American States even taxation which involves public expenditure suggests the opportunity of obtaining private profit. Political managers and ingenious speculators have long since discovered the opportunities which the sovereignty of the United States affords for speculation. A speculative manager would think little of buying up a branch of the International Society, either for political or commercial purposes.

The International Society, which the Chicago workmen joined for the purpose of vexing and frightening their fellow-citizens, would certainly not be a very profitable business if it were not apparently broken down in Europe. The English workmen are tired of listening to half intelligible declamations on universal destruction although they may not be unwilling to vary their demands for increased wages by denunciations of the capitalist body. The American workmen are disposed to postpone the organization of strikes to demonstrations that wages, whether high or low, are merely instruments of slavery. The late Congresses in Switzerland have been attended by constantly dwindling numbers, and one of two of the delegates to the Congress of the Independence to New York. The fundamental doctrine of the society is repugnant to all American habits of thought. At one of the earlier Congresses the delegates, including some representatives of the English Trade Unions, pledged themselves never to desert their order by raising themselves above the class of capitalists. It may be safely assumed that no native American workman intends to remain a workman for life, or to neglect the first opportunity of becoming a tradesman, a clerk, or perhaps a member of the country gentry. The American Senators, and the journeymen tailors, no longer since President of the Republic, is a waste of time to attempt any organization of the class which is constantly shifting its component parts. The dignity of labour is proclaimed on innumerable platforms, because at any given time there are always some who are not labourers. It is well known that the American citizen is constantly and successfully contriving to devolve as much labour as possible on immigrants and foreigners. If the clamorous mob of Chicago is principally Irish, it will be easily ejected, and Irish

Of a thousand American workmen, five hundred will, in the course of two or three years, have found for themselves some easier and more attractive occupation than manual labour. I relief works are temporarily established, it will probably be found that the demand for labour will be reduced to small proportions.

Even if the great preponderance of force were not on the side of the employers, it would be extremely difficult to accomplish the equitable distribution or systematic plunder of American property. There are no large estates to divide among new bodies of freeholders; and when every man who desires a farm of his own estate is already engaged to the Homestead Law, the spoliation of actual owners is a task almost paradoxical and dangerous. A dominant rabble might perhaps effect an equitable distribution among its members of furniture, plate, the stocks of tradesmen, and other tangible kinds of personal property; but the wealth which excites their envy is lodged in the hands of a small part of a comparatively indispensible stratum of the population, capital and credit and shares in industrial undertakings would not be easily reduced into the possession of new and unauthorized owners. There is no reason to suppose that disaffected workmen in any part of the continent would be disposed to assert by force their claims to the property of their neighbours. In this country are riots more summarily suppressed, although extravagant language never provoked interference. French and Spanish Communists may perhaps boast of logical consistency when they occasionally take up arms for the promotion of their cause; but in England, as in France, the ready transition from a wicked act is not regarded as a merit. Nevertheless it would be unwise wholly to distrust the inferences which the pupils of International teachers in Europe and America habitually deduce from their avowed principles. From the doctrine of the equality of all men, Governments and Legislatures have been urged to interfere by arbitrary manual labour there is but a short step to the Chicago clamour for the equitable distribution of property. In England democratic orators constantly associate the alleged insufficiency of the wages with the exclusion of farmers and labourers from the franchise, and, as far as they have any meaning, they intend to persuade their clients that votes for members of Parliament would bring them higher wages, better homes, and greater material prosperity. The workmen know both that they cannot vote to their profit, and that they are still dissatisfied with their wages, or with the demand for labour. It is natural that they should prefer to divide property equitably, or rather to talk of dividing it.

A FRENCH JOURNALIST.—The Cornhill for December 20, speaking of the proprietor of the Figaro—“Short and stout, with a head of bullet-shape, a deep, dyed mustache, and a pair of white whiskers, M. de Villenaveux holds veritable levees in every public spot where his countrymen are gathered, and has a way of nodding and of holding out his hand which is of great importance, and would like to keep up the dignity of it if he could; but unfortunately he cannot.” In the first started his Figaro he never counted on its becoming a success. He was at first selling for 60,000 copies a day, and guiding the notice of the higher classes of the French capital. Now that he finds himself a courted personage, to whom even the Emperor bows, he is rather struck by the humors of the thing, and will confess the fact in private if he thinks you can be relied on. It is needless to say that M. Villenaveux's name is an assumed one, his real petronymic being the name of a French general, of French literary folk, he began in life with no capital but his own wit. His mode of rising was however extremely simple once he had scraped enough credit and money together to found a paper. Unlike other editors who have an opinion, and a value down as a guide to their contributors, M. de Villenaveux except his opinions to himself, and allowed the writers on his paper to say what they pleased. As he enlisted the most pushing, witty, and reckless journalists that love of money could procure, the concert of discordant sounds which his newspaper emitted was not less the result of his journalism, and like most new things it paid well. And so M. de Villenaveux has always been to pick up the commonest scraps of news in the most attractive form, and to make them the subject of a secondary consideration—and the result is that he has been killed in the Figaro's columns he always dies more artistically, and under more interesting circumstances, than the price of the old school. This way of doing business, and he does not conceal his contempt for new sheets which, like those of England, disappear the day as they have happened.

EASTER MONDAY, EASTER MONDAY.
MONSTER PICNIC.
POSTPONED FROM ANNUAL DAY, on account of the inclemency of the weather.

The COMMITTEE have much pleasure in announcing that all arrangements for the MONSTER GATHERING are now complete.

There seems to be no doubt, judging from the EXTRA-ORDINARY SUCCESS of former Picnics, that several thousands of people will attend. The Committee have done their utmost to arrange for the comfort, pleasure, and amusement of the large number expected.

CHOWDER BAY AND ITS SURROUNDINGS.
The most romantic and beautiful retreat to be found anywhere about the harbour. The scenery is really grand. The extensive sandy beach is cleared right round, forming an easy serpentine walk to the Fortifications, which is the spot where you get a glorious panorama of Port Jackson. No one who has visited the place has failed to praise the gorgeous views laid before them—the whole of the magnificent harbour, and a long distance beyond.

The grounds are highly improved. A large amount of summer houses, tables, &c., for families. OPINIONS OF THE PRESS UPON THE LAST PICNIC.

The PROTESTANT STANDARD reports says—"It was a grand day, and the whole of the day was spent in the management of the most successful must have been satisfied."

The HERALD says—"The Picnic to Chowder Bay was a successful one. It is a complete success, and the most successful must have been satisfied."

The Picnic was a success, and the most successful must have been satisfied. The Picnic was a success, and the most successful must have been satisfied.
